Description

NEMESI_Architectural and urban services. Founded in 1997 by Michele Molè, Nemesi is an architectural and urban design firm which operates on different scales of the project with a rigorous approach open to new challenges and where each point of arrival represents a brand new starting point. Nemesi has gained significant international experience in the design of offices, residences, infrastructure, cultural and leisure facilities, public building and master plans, all with a view to satisfy the varying needs of public and private clients. Among these projects it is useful to mention the Italian Pavilion at Milan Expo 2015, result of an important competition held in 2013, that is the Icon Project at Expo Milan 2015. In response to the specific characteristics and challenges of the project brief, Nemesi' approach stands out due to its ability to focus on the potential of the project, while emphasising the functional, environmental and economic aspects. The architectural language research is accompanied by an ability to control the project throughout each stage, from the feasibility study and the architectural concept, right up to final design and construction. Nemesi works alongside the integrated architecture company "Nemesi&Partners", which has been in business since 2008 and is led by Michele Molè and Susanna Tradati, associate partners. With more than 1,000 square metres, Nemesi is based in the district of Pietralata, Rome, and recently opened a new office in Milan. A new Office in Beijing is today under construction. Professionals at Nemesi include architects and graphic designers. 3D modelling and BIM accompany the project at all stages of development, from conception to construction and management.
